OUR BROADCASTER

Our Broadcaster! Let us make it a permanent thing --an institution so fixed that there will be no further question of its stability.

In previous years, there has been a debate as to whether it shall remain in the school. There was, at one time, a small printed annual published every year. This did not go under the name of "The Broadcaster," however. Originally, the Broadcaster was a monthly, then it became a quarterly, and this year it is a semi-annual.

Our aim is to make these two issues so successful that the students will demand and expect a printed annual as much as they do interscholastic athletics. We all know that football games and track meets arouse school spirit. Since we are striving to be a "live" school, why not try to develop enthusiasm in all lines, without narrowing it down to a particular one?

When a school establishes a printed publication, it is ranked more highly among other schools, and it is immediately labeled "Progressive." We want to rank high. We want to be progressive. Let's work for a printed annual until we get it!

THE SENTENCE HOUR

s the chilling strokes of the clock at the end of the room struck ten solemn notes like an evil modeling the sythe of the reaper, a hush fell on all present. From a rear door came the first of those twelve trustees of justice. Slowly, they wound their way to their accustomed places. In the eyes of each was the unmistakable gleam of righteousness, which proclaimed that he thought he knew from whence justice came.

The accused, tall and pale, stood to take his sentence. He, so young in years yet so warped and old in soul, had at last come to reap his harvest. From a strained glass window above the judge's head the pale morning light fell on him as he stood alone against the world. Here the Master had put pliable clay in the hands of an incapable workman; here a tabernacle had been used as a house of disrepute. He thus stood as a statue might stand—cold, aloof, alone and loveless. Christ's image etched in the glass of the window seemed to watch from on high. There in that solemn tomb of all crime and wrong-doing, above the heads of all the court seemed to ring these words—

"And he gazed at those crowding about her,
As she stood there so white and alone,
And he said in a voice tinkling of silver,
"Let the blameless come, cast the first stone."

The judge stood, and lifting his black cloth, he gave the death sentence ending—"An eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth, a life for a life, that is what ye shall pay to the laws of justice on Christmas morn."

The black cloth settled on the floor like a cloud over all the earth shadowing its beauty.

Another dreary procession wound its way to the scaffold, while through the air, which even those thick prison walls could not shut out, came the tinkling sound of children's voices--

"Christ was born on Christmas Day."

SANTA'S UNEXPECTED VISIT

The crackling of the wood was the only sound in the large, richly furnished living room. With the exception of the reflection of the dancing flames, the room was in total darkness. Before the fireplace, sat a handsome man about thirty years of age, lazily stretched in a large easy chair, gazing thoughtfully into the fire.

Upstairs, tearfully huddled in their white beds, lay two small children, a boy about four years of age, and his sister, Elaine, two years older. They were these tiny tots crying. It was Christmas Eve. The longest evening of the year, to any small child's imagination, for at evening when they hang their stockings, it seems centuries before morning arrives when they can peek into them.

As the new moon peeped through the window to ask the reason for all these tears, a tiny face appeared over the mountain of blankets and tearfully whispered, "Eddie, when Mumsey wanted anything she used to pray to dear God, and she said if you prayed long and hard enough you'd get what you wanted. Why can't we pray too?"

The sullen father repeated to himself his children's pleas for Santa's visit and his hasty replies. As he thought of last year's happy Christmas Eve, it again brought back that ghostly scene of his wife's death, two months later. What could he do to try to fill that empty space in his little darling's hearts which now only held a memory of dear Mumsey. He was sorry he had spoken so harshly to them this evening, but he was deeply wrapped in his sorrowful memories, and his unstrung nerves. Not listen to their chillish pleas. Without realizing what he was saying, he had harshly told them there would not be any Santa Claus this year and had sent them to bed. The children had understood his look and tone of voice and hastily scampered off his knee, crying as if their little hearts were breaking.

By the time the father had controlled his unstrung nerves and reproached himself for speaking so hastily, he decided to sneak upstairs and kiss his little darlings goodnight, and go to bed himself. As he approached the nursery door, this is what he heard. "Dear God, please don't let Santa forget us, I've tried awfully hard to be a good girl. I want a doll, a buggy, and a set of blue dishes and a rocking chair." Then a babyish voice said, "Dear God, I've been good, too. I wants a train, a wagon, a bat and ball and some blocks." Elaine's sweet little voice said, "Now repeat what I say, Buddy. Please have Santa bring us these things, and make Daddy feel better, and Mummy happy in Heaven. Amen."

A teary-eyed man snatched his hat from the rack in the hall and rushed out in the cold, bitter night towards the shopping district.

The next morning, when Elaine and Buddy opened their eyes, they were greeted by a beautifully decorated tree in their nursery. Their Daddy with a smile, instead of that worried look, stood by the window with a doll in one hand and a bat in the other cheerfully calling, "MERRY CHRISTMAS DARLINGS."

THE UNLIGHTED CHRISTMAS TREE

In the center of a room stands a tree
All decorated with pretties so bright
In the corner there's a box still unpacked
On the tree there's not one single light.

In the box there's a new Santa's suit,
A fond father's play for his little babe's joy,
In another box hidden in a room somewhere
There are nuts and candy and many a toy.

In a tiny white box there lies a little girl
Who was taken so quickly from a mother and dad.
In two chairs before a glowing fire place bright
They sit, thinking of the dearest thing they had.

A tiny white bed is left so empty and cold
While a mother and dad are left in sorrow.
They will always remember the one, so little and dear
Who will be laid away on the morrow.

A mother sits with sadness and falling tears
While father stands with stricken face so white,
Both thinking of that one thing alone
Their babe, taken from them that night.

Then, perhaps as the years roll onward,
The sorrow and pain of today will soften,
And only a memory, accompanied by a sigh,
Will be heard from them quite often.

Each yule-tide will bring a tear and a sigh,
Although they know it just had to be,
Yet how could they not vividly remember
The year with the Unlighted Christmas Tree.

WEIGHT REDUCTION

This is an article about a boy named Jack who decided to lose weight. He had a clothes size of 40 and a height of 5'10". Jack wanted to lose weight because he was not happy with his appearance.

Jack decided to hire a personal trainer who has been in the fitness industry for 20 years. The trainer had a PhD in nutrition and a certificate in personal training. He designed a custom workout plan for Jack that included both cardio and strength training.

Jack started the program and lost 20 pounds in 6 months. He felt great and was more confident in his appearance. He continued to work with the trainer and lost a total of 60 pounds in 1 year. Jack is now happy with his weight and enjoys a healthy lifestyle.
ONE CHRISTMAS EVE

I was going over my Christmas list one evening to see if I had included everybody, when an idea came into my mind. Why not give Miss Johnson a present, she had been so good to us all?

Miss Johnson was a woman who held herself aloof from the rest of us. She was very cold in her ways, and she was very unsocial. She was not very old; I imagine that she was about thirty-eight. She was a very pretty woman, and if you ever had the chance to see her smiling, you would say that she was very beautiful. She had small features, very beautiful, large, blue eyes and blonde, curly hair, which made ringlets about her face.

Yes, I had now fully decided to get her a Christmas present, although I knew that all the thanks she would give me would be a cold nod and a brisk "Thank you". I then set about thinking what I could get that would please her.

Just two days until Christmas, and I had not decided what to get her yet. That day I went to the city with Grace, and after hunting all day, I did not see anything which I could get for her. As I was going by a jewelry shop, I saw a beautiful necklace of amethysts. I was about to hurry by it, when I remembered that her eyes were blue, and I thought how beautiful she would look in those pretty amethysts, so I decided to get them for her although they were rather expensive.

On Christmas Eve I was prepared to give them to her. When I arrived at her door, I opened it slowly and tiptoed to the back of her chair and put the pretty stones
The conclusions are still premature to make bold statements. Much more evidence needs to be gathered in order to draw definitive conclusions. The data analyzed so far suggest that there may be underlying factors that contribute to the observed phenomena. Further research is needed to validate these findings and to address any potential biases.

In the meantime, it is important to remain open-minded and cautious in interpreting the results. More studies should be conducted to corroborate the initial findings. The implications of these results are significant and could have far-reaching consequences for future research and policy decisions.

Additional research on this topic is needed to better understand the complex interplay of factors involved. It is hoped that this paper will serve as a starting point for further discussion and collaboration among researchers and practitioners in the field.

Further studies are recommended to address the limitations of the current research. More rigorous methods and larger sample sizes should be employed to improve the reliability and generalizability of the findings. Collaboration between different disciplines and methodologies may also be beneficial in gaining a comprehensive understanding of the subject.

In summary, while the current results are promising, more research is needed to fully substantiate the findings. The implications of these results are significant and should be explored further in order to inform future research and policy decisions.
around her neck. Then I led her to a mirror to show her how pretty they looked on her. "What pretty blue eyes you have," I said in her ear. "They look just like those amethysts."

This had a curious effect on her, and into her eyes came a soft twinkling light, and she said, as if in a dream, "That's just what he used to say." This sounded good to me because I thought that then she would tell me something of her past life. My thoughts were not far from right, because instantly she started to tell me her story. This is what she told me.

"When I was eighteen, I fell in love with Clifford Anderson, a rich, handsome boy of twenty. We were very devoted to each other, but as he was young his parents and mine would not let us marry.

"He was very rich, and I very poor so that also put a bar between us. Although I was poor, I was very popular in town. I was the only child of a doting father and mother and although we were poor, I was allowed many luxuries some girls did not have.

"One day as I was sitting by a trickling little brook reading, Cliff rode up and said, "Goodbye, Helen, dear, and please remember that I didn't do it." With that comment he rode away.

"A shiver went up and down my back. Such questions as, "What didn't he do? Why was he so excited and pale? Why did he say, "Goodbye" as he did?" flashed through my mind, and for a few minutes I couldn't think."
"The next thing I saw was the sheriff and his posse galloping in the direction that Cliff went. My brain was in a jumble. Whatever was the matter? I asked myself. Then I ran all the way to town to inquire.

"As soon as I got to town, a little boy said, 'Say, Helen, heard the news? Cliff shot his father and ran off with his money.' I felt faint, then I said, 'He didn't!' 'They have proof that he did,' said Jimmy and left me alone.

"Because this town was near Canada, Cliff had no trouble getting over the border, and the sheriff was forced to return without him. Nevertheless, the town still regarded him as a thief and murderer, until two years ago, when the real criminal confessed. Then a search was made for Cliff, to beg his pardon but he could not be found.

"I know that he is coming to me some time soon, though, because I received a little card the other day with the one word 'Coming.' Who else could it be, but Cliff?"

Just as she was saying this last line, we heard the words, "Extra! Extra! Extra! Read about the big train wreck. Extra!" I ran quickly outside and bought a paper.

There were big screeching headlines saying, "Hundreds killed when two trains collide." Then it told how the wreck happened. As we were both reading the dead list, Miss Johnson uttered a moan and dropped to the floor. I quickly gave her a drink and bathed her forehead, but I could not bring her back to consciousness. I then called Doctor Benton, but he said that she had died from a shock, because her heart had been weak. I could not think what could have caused that the door to the library was not open and that the room was empty. We tried the other doors, but they were all locked. We started to leave, but then we noticed a narrow window in the back of the room. We decided to try the window as a way out.

When we opened the window, we found ourselves looking out at a dark, empty street. We couldn't see much, but we knew we had to find a way to get out. We searched the room for any clues, but we didn't find anything. That's when we heard a noise from the street. It sounded like someone was running towards us.

We tried to hide, but we were too late. The person broke down the window and entered the room. We were scared, but we stood our ground. The person asked us what we were doing there, and we explained our situation. They were surprised, but they didn't blame us. They helped us find a way out and gave us some food and water to help us on our way.
this shock until I, unconsciously, looked at the paper again. I then realized what had caused the shock. The second name under the dead list was, "Clifford Anderson age forty."

THOUGHTS

I saw the stars shine brightly
In the heavens overhead,
And felt the wind blow lightly,
Through the window by my bed.

I thought how those same stars
Shone thousands of years ago,
And shadows looked like bars,
Upon the glittering snow.

"CHRISTMAS EVE"

At eight o'clock each hung a sock,
And tiptoed up to bed.
They sang their airs and said their prayers
And mother to them read.

The moon shone bright as noon-day light,
Upon the sparkling snow.
All little tots, in bed had hopped,
'Ere Santa called out "'Oa."

At twelve o'clock, John heard a knock,
And tiptoed down the stair,
He had been told, 'twas very bold,
To peep if Santa's there.

There was a bell, and something fell,
It sounded all so queer,
So John was scared, though he had dared,
And trembled much with fear.

There came a sound the chimney down,
And Santa did appear.
John turned around without a sound,
And vanished, like a deer.

CHRISTMAS SPIRIT, AT LAST

Thomas Jones was the wealthiest man living in the state of Michigan, and he was also the crankiest man in Michigan. His friends estimated him to be worth about fifteen millions of dollars. He was very bitter toward children. Every time he saw a group of children playing, he would ask, "Haven't you anything else to do?" He would turn towards the largest child in the group and say, "If I were your father, I would put you to work. When I was a boy, I had to work hard. I could not play like you children."

One little boy in the group spoke up and said, "That's what all the old fellows say; they brag too much about their childhood."

This made the man very angry. He walked away very quickly from this group.

Thomas Jones was one of the stingiest men in the state. When representatives of charity societies would come to his place and ask for a donation, he would say, "I have worked hard all my life for my money, and I cannot let it go as easily as that."

Jones was called to New York to confer with officials of his company. It was December fourth, and it was a very cold day. He decided to move into the next car which was warmer. He came to seat number fourteen and sat there. After he settled himself, he found that two small children were sitting by him. The tiny baby started uttering a speech of goos, as if to say, "Hello, how are you?" This mean man did not even smile.

"Say, conductor, may I get a better seat than this?" called Mr. Jones.

"What is the trouble with that seat?" asked the conductor.

"It is a little chilly here where I am sitting," said Mr. Jones.

The conductor finally showed him another seat.

Jones arrived home on December twenty-second. He found that there were five children in the yard that he had not seen before this. "Oh, I guess it's another new family that will cause me some sorrow," grumbled Jones to himself.

Jones was not feeling well when he arrived home. That night he became very ill. The oldest girl Evelyn had noticed him go into the house that evening. She had not seen him around the house for two days. She decided that it would be best to go and see if there were any trouble. She knocked at the door, but there was no response. She opened the door and walked in to the kitchen. It was in a very untidy condition. She walked into the bedroom; there she found the man lying in bed almost dead. His hands were very cold. The heart beat was very faint. She lighted the stove. She called her brother and sent him to the drug store.

After a few hours, Jones regained consciousness. Evelyn told him to take the medicine which she had prepared for him.

"How did you happen to know that I was here?" asked Jones.

"I saw you go into the house a few days ago, and you did not come into the yard or go out of the house, so I thought maybe you were ill," replied Evelyn.

"Are you helping me out in view of receiving money or just to show the right Christmas Spirit?" asked Thomas.

"I always try to help someone become happy at Christmas time," said Evelyn, "I always go around asking for donations to help the crippled children and orphans."

"I never helped anyone in my life, but I sure am going to help someone now," said Jones happily. "Will you please bring me my check book?"

Evelyn handed it to him. He wrote two checks and handed them to Evelyn. One was for five thousand dollars in favor of the Crippled Childrens' Fund, and the other was for two thousand dollars payable to herself. She was very happy, but she was still more happy to have helped Mr. Jones recover.

She spent the rest of the afternoon cleaning the house. The food that she cooked was enjoyed by Jones.

After he had been in bed for two weeks, he was able to walk around the garden. It was so different. The garden had been cleaned, the flowers had been watered. Evelyn was trimming some of the plants in the garden.

"How old are you, Evelyn?" asked Jones.

"I am nineteen years old," replied Evelyn.

"I am forty-three years of age, but--will you marry me?" Jones asked rather slowly, then added, "I love you." Evelyn loved him too. She knew there was something good in him, even if he was cranky.

"I will marry you Thomas," said Evelyn.

After they had been married five years, Thomas was the proud father of two beautiful children. When his youngest child started talking to him in goo-goos, he remembered the incident on the train. He was ashamed of himself for that. "I should have played with that little baby then," said Jones to himself. He has had a Christmas tree in his home for the last five years.

"I will have a Christmas tree every year in my home," he said to Evelyn. "It makes the home brighter and helps to bring out the Christmas Spirit more," replied Evelyn.

Every year he gives five thousand dollars to the Crippled Children's Fund. He gives a party in honor of the village children each Christmas. He gives money to charity or organizations readily, for now Thomas Jones has certainly caught the right Christmas Spirit.

A Star

A star swings low in the east,
Over a white-walled town,
And into the desert gloom
Its light falls whitely down.

Across the waste of sand,
Under the gleaming star,
Come three wise, wondering kings,
Seeking, from afar.

And as the star glows brighter,
Heavenly voices sing--
Voices glorious and sweet
Heralding the King!

Cynthia Burroughs

Christmas Night

On Christmas night,
There came a light.
It was a star
In the heaven far.

Then o'er the lands,
Came men from bands.
They were the wise
Who watched the skies.

They brought with them,
Gifts like a gem,
To give the King,
Of whom we sing.

Christmas Time

Christmas is here
We will be a cheerful lot
Every one will cheer
When it's twelve o'clock

I will hang my sock
Near the mantle hot
And be sure of no knot
When it's twelve o'clock

The Christmas Table is neat
The people for dinner begin to knock
Because the turkey looks so sweet
When it's twelve o'clock

THE GUIDING CHRISTMAS CHIMES

A Christmas morn the homeless old man arose and left the old barn in which he had spent the night. He yawned as he walked into the large city. He put his hands into his pockets, but it did little good for they were full of holes. Perhaps someone would give him some old clothes in place of the new ones which they would receive as gifts. He wondered.

It was a very cold morning, and the old man's fingers and nose were blue. His feet felt like clumsy hunks of ice, and they were very numb, but, he had to walk, for he had no place to go.

As he passed the many houses, he looked through the windows. "What scenes he saw!

There was a roaring fire in a large fireplace. It seemed to radiate joy as well as heat. Even the blue and golden flames seemed to be joyfully prancing. A large ornamented Christmas tree stood near the fireplace. There were some shiny red and green apples in a golden fruit dish on the table. Two little girls were sitting on the rug near the fireplace; they were playing with their Christmas toys. The parents were sitting peacefully in large arm chairs. They were reading. "That joy there seemed to be in that one room!

The old man stopped and watched for a few moments. It brought back old memories, and he pictured in his mind some of the happy Christmases he had had when he was a child. Then, the chilly coldness of the Christmas Morn returned.
The theory that the development of certain genes in a species is closely related to the environment is widely accepted. This idea suggests that natural selection acts on the genetic variability of a population, leading to the evolution of new species.

Similarly, the study of heredity and genetics has shown that genes are transmitted from parent to offspring. This process is influenced by various factors, including environmental conditions and genetic mutations.

In conclusion, the relationship between genes and the environment is a complex and dynamic one, with both genetic and environmental factors playing crucial roles in the development and evolution of species.
In the distance, the Christmas Chimes cheerily filled the cold and cloudy atmosphere. They seemed to lightly drift to the listening ears. They seemed to summon some lonesome soul to Christmas services. "It is a wonderous sound to hear on Christmas morn," thought the lonely man. So, as if someone were saying "follow the sound of the bell Follow the sound!" the aged man guided himself to the church by listening to the chimes.

Then, at last, he reached the church, it seemed to be a palace. The windows were beautifully stained, and leading to its entrance was a marble stairway.

The old man wondered whether or not he should go into the church, but soon the kind-hearted minister was standing in the doorway. He asked the tramp to enter and warm himself. It was rather early for services, so the minister and the tramp talked together.

The minister, by clever questions, learned of the tramp's past life and hard times.

"It must be rather lonely this Christmas, is it not?" concluded the minister.

"Yes, it is! Yet, I saw something that made me happy today," answered the tramp. He told the preacher of the gospel of the scene which he had seen through the window of the house.

The minister invited the tramp to have Christmas dinner with him, and he said that he needed a janitor for the church.

A tear of joy came to the old man's eye when he was offered a Christmas dinner, and he was to be janitor of the church and was going to live with the minister. He would also soon have some warm clothes. Oh, it was wonderful!

During the services, the old man prayed and gave thanks to God for his Christmas gifts. The Christmas chimes were rung again to close the services--those chimes which had guided him.

THE LAST VOYAGE

The ship was sinking,
And the sea was high.
The men were pumping
without a sigh.

The hole was large,
And life-boats few.
The pump's discharge
would never do.

The ship did sink
With men and mate.
Without a wink,
They met their fate.

Oh! dear Santa Claus is come down from above,
He owns a new plane with which he's in love.
And save his toy-shooters he weapons has none,
His classy new aeroplane couldn't carry a gun.
So faithful to children; so dauntless in air.
There never was a man like him, to compare.

He stopped not at houses where children were bad.
But after he passed them, he wished that he had.
And 'ere he alighted on top of my gate.
He got caught in a cloud; that's why he was late.
Neither a laggard in love, nor afraid of the air,
Cause he hurried his plane, so he could get there.

Then, at length, when he came in my hall,
He was shaken and bruised for he had a bad fall.
Then he spoke to my father, his hand on his gun
For poor little me was ready to run.
"Oh, what does she need? What does she crave?
Is there anything here that the darling would save?"

I wanted to speak but couldn't for fright,
So I cuddled in bed and hid from his sight.
Dad talked with Santy outside my door
"Give her a dolly; she couldn't want more,"
Was Daddy's reply. Santa gave a grunt
While in his bag, he began to hunt.

I jumped from my bed; I was thankful and glad
I ran to the door, threw my arms around Dad.
When I went to thank Santa, no one was there,
I listened and heard a dull buzzing in air.
Santa was gone; the dolly was mine.
I told dad I'd be good 'till next Christmas time.

Ah, children! Gallants! and Ladies so fair!
Santa loves company, and he loves the air.
His aeroplane of brown and his suit of bright red,
Sure dazzles the children, so Daddy said.
If you hear buzzing when in your room
You'll know it's Santa, and he'll be there soon.

FOR SALE

Soo Collins had a good pair of pants to sell. He advertised as follows:

"Owing to my ill health, I will sell at auction at my home, in township 29, Range 15 north, according to recent school survey, one pair of good corduroys, age 6 months. They are of undoubted courage and have been torn frequently. They are attached very much to their present home with a nail, but I will sell them to any one who will treat them right. They are one half cloth and one half holes; I would rather sell to a non-resident of Brentwood."

And all through the garage
Not a motor was running,
Not even a Dodge.

With the hope that Old Santa
Hidt bring a new Ford.

TOPSY TURVY HOLLYWOOD

Hollywood has more Spanish homes than Spain, more
Greek gods than Greece, more sheiks than Arabia, more Bohemians than Bohemia, more richards than Russia, and more bull than Bulgaria. It is the only place where one can see Judas Iscariot, Napoleon, and a cowboy going to work in the same flivver; where Cleopatra eats chili and beans at Hollywood Bowl with Abraham Lincoln; where George Washington is told how to conduct affairs at Valley Forge by an ex-taxi driver. Hollywood is where we see a Chicago gangster going down town with a New York police officer; where a modern flapper sits with Martha Washington in the same car; where a Jewish damsel talks to a Christian priest, and where Shakespeare goes to work with an ice man in the moving van. That, briefly, is Hollywood!

THE KITCHEN CLOCK

"Tick, tock, tick, tock," says the kitchen clock.
As it marks the time away.
"Tick, tock, tick, tock," it seems to mock,
As we waste our time away.

As it ticks the whole day through.
"Get busy, get busy, 'tis no time for play."
Until your work is all through.

FRESHMEN RECEPTION

The Freshmen Reception, held October 6, was attended by a large crowd who enjoyed seeing the "green" Freshies introduced to the mysteries of high school. Stunts were given by each class. The Sophomores gave a clever burlesque; the Juniors a college skit; and the Seniors gave the filming of "Wild Nell, the Pet of the Plains." Refreshments and dancing followed the initiation. Music was furnished by Link's Orchestra.

SOPHOMORE HOP

The "Big Game" was held October 16. Perhaps you have guessed that it was the Sophomore Hop given in the school auditorium by the class of '31. We danced gayly over a football field, at each end of which were goal posts, one decorated in the blue and gold of U. C., and the other was decorated in the red and white of Stanford. Around the stadium were pennants of many popular American colleges. Multicolored pennants formed the sky of the football field.

Wilson's Orchestra of Oakland furnished good music from the bleachers on the stage.

Little footballs served as clever programs, and punch was served through a huge football in the hall.

All present reported a splendid time, and the Sophomores
STATEMENT OF CLAIMS

1. The plaintiff in this action, E. Smith, alleges that on the date of the incident, he was injured as a result of the defendant's negligence. The defendant, ABC Corporation, operated a construction site adjacent to the plaintiff's home. The plaintiff was walking to a nearby store when he tripped over a piece of debris left on the sidewalk by the defendant's workers. As a result of this incident, the plaintiff sustained injuries to his leg.

2. The plaintiff seeks compensation for his medical expenses, lost wages, and pain and suffering. He also seeks punitive damages to punish the defendant for its negligence.

3. The defendant denies the plaintiff's allegations and claims that the plaintiff was also partially responsible for the incident. The defendant provided proper warning signs and barricades around the construction site, and the plaintiff had a duty to exercise reasonable care to avoid the hazard.

4. The case will proceed to trial, and the plaintiff will present evidence to support his claims. The defendant will have the opportunity to dispute the plaintiff's evidence and present its own defense.

5. This case is subject to the jurisdiction of the Superior Court of the State of XYZ, located in the County of ABC. The plaintiff is represented by the law firm of DEF, and the defendant is represented by the law firm of GHI.

The Student Body of Liberty Union High School, under the leadership of President Helbor Crandell, has succeeded in starting the year well. On Labor Day, many comical costumes and characters assembled here. Classes were held in the morning and in the afternoon everyone "pitched in" to some good hard work and was rewarded with a lunch which was served by the girls.

As our yell leader, Oliver Upham, who was elected last year, has moved to Richmond, one of our first problems was to elect another. Robert Walker was elected leader, and Donald Jacobsen was chosen assistant.

During the month of October, Miss McDonald, sponsored by Mr. Hannum, president of the American Trust Bank, at Byron, introduced the banking system into our school.

During October the Student Body was entertained by Chief Hail Stone of the Cherokee Tribe. He not only presented a number of Indian dances and songs, but he enlightened our minds on many points concerning the Indians and their lives.

November 13, 1928, Mr. Bridges of Heald's Business College gave an interesting talk on "Helps on the Way to Success." Mr. Bridges ended his speech with an amusing little story of a locomotive very determinedly puffing "I-think-I-can,—I-think-I-can,—I-think-I-can-----" the significance of which, none of us missed.

On December 3, 1928, Captain McCullen, veteran of the Civil War, told us of some of his experiences while... crossing the plains to Oregon Captain McCullen was introduced to us by his son-in-law Rev. Crowe of the Methodist Church of Brentwood.

GIRLS' LEAGUE NOTES

The Girls' League started this year by preparing the lunch on Labor Day.

Iola Dainty and Agnes Dutro were our representatives to the Girls' League Conference, held at Santa Rosa.

The question of compulsory wearing of uniforms has been settled by an amendment which has been added to the constitution.

Our Girls' Hi Jinks, which is an annual affair, has been postponed until next semester, because of so much illness.

The Girls' League did all it could to make the High Jinks a success. One of its enterprises during the evening was a novelty booth.

DRAMATIC CLUB NOTES

At the first meeting of the Dramatic Club, the following officers were elected:

Wilda Lavere—President
James Columbo—Vice-president
Donald Jacobson—Secretary

Throughout the coming school term the club plans to produce plays before the Student Body. The plays are to be coached by the students of the club under the supervision of Miss Haston.

The club did its part for the Hi Jinks by staging two plays, "Thursday Evening" and "Green Shadows."

Donald Jacobson
The Liberty Aggies' Club was organized this year. Only those taking agriculture are qualified to become members. The club is under the direction of the instructor of agriculture in this school, Mr. Hilliard. Mr. Hilliard is a graduate of Davis Branch of the University of California. Last year he taught at Dos Palos.

The officers elected for this year are as follows:

Pietro Dematei—President
Lawrence Rosa—Vice-president
Lloyd Thomas—Secretary
Lloyd Thomas—Treasurer
Horace Mathison—Reporter
Lionel Thomas—Sergeant-at-arms

The purposes of the club are to keep the members informed on the latest and most important advancements pertaining to agriculture; to secure information on any agricultural, or related subjects, within a reasonable length of time, for the members; and to promote better social relationships among those engaged in agricultural work.

On September 23, Ralph Lambdin, Byron Houston, Arthur Frey, Ellsworth Wood, Robert Fletcher, Lausten Armstrong, Charles Lewis, Jack Nash, Professor Nash and Mr. Hilliard attended the county fair at Hollister. Vegetables, fruits and animals were displayed there.

Pietro Dematei, Horace Mathison, Donald Jacobsen, Robert Fletcher and Mr. Hilliard went to Lodi on November 10, to judge grapes. When they went through Stockton, they stopped and examined a variety of grapes. They then watched other school teams judge apples, cream cheese, and butter.
On November 15, Elmo, Joseph and Lausten Armstrong, Donald Jacobsen, Arthur Frey, Robert Fletcher, Pietro Dematei, Horace Mathison and Mr. Hillard went to South San Francisco to the California Live Stock and Baby Beef Show. Various types of prize stock were there from the Western States.

After lunch, they were shown through the Western Meat Company's building. They watched from the time the animals were killed until they were packed and ready for shipment to markets. The most interesting feature was the making of bologna and "hot dogs."

Tuesday, November 20, Leonard Augusta, Mervyn Evans and Alvin Jesse of the Animal Husbandry Class accompanied by Mr. Hillard visited the Pacific Slope Dairy Show which is held annually at Oakland. This was the second largest show of its kind in the United States. All of the best dairy animals in the Western States, graded samples of butter, cheese, and milk and ice cream, and the latest development in dairy machinery and equipment were exhibited there.

On December 1, two teams of three members each went to Davis, one to judge grapes and the other to judge truck crops. Arthur Frey placed second in the truck judging contest.

For this Christmas vacation, the club members are planning a trip to Yosemite Valley.

The Class of '32 entered the high school one bright August morning with high hopes. (For that is all a freshman can have at such a time.) Some shook and trembled to think of what they must face.

After a few days they had settled themselves, and were on their journey for education. The class has a group of brilliant and progressive officers. Vivian Bonnickson, its hopeful President, is beginning to think the class' future will be a startling success. Evelyn Johnson is the Vice-president. The up and coming little Secretary and Treasurer is James Cooper.

Miss Logan, the class teacher, has been a constant help to us.

Donald Krumland and Vera Braga are the class representatives.

Kathryn Post, the class teller, assures the future success of the freshman to save money.

Two of the class have made the Dramatic Club. They are Helen Reese and Julien Wagenet. The class wishes them luck, and hopes that they will be the great dramatists of the school.

On the whole, the class thinks it is a success as far as it has gone and hopes to be able to prove this soon.

Sophomores! Rah! Rah! Rah! Sophomores! We're still the same old peppy class this year, except that we aren't freshmen any more. It surely feels good not to be called, "Hey, you Freshman!"

Before our Hop we gave a dancing party at the Auditorium to which we invited the Junior class.

Although our Hop has past, we haven't stopped hopping. We were very busy during the first part of the year giving sales and preparing for our Hop. We are taking an active part in the Annual High Jinks. We also have second highest number of memberships in the C. S. F.

Our class officers for the year are:

Oscar Burroughs----------President
Helen Webber-----------Vice-president
Myrtle Middleton-------Secretary-Treasurer
Ruby Frey-------------Student Affairs
William Beaman--------Student Affairs
Charles Lewis---------Sergeant at Arms

Della Crocco

THE JUNIOR CLASS NOTES

The Juniors have had several sales this year to raise money for our greatest event of the year, our Junior Prom, which is to be held January 26. We have planned to have the theme of our dance Oriental, and we hope that it will be as successful as our Sophomore Hop of last year.

Besides working hard for our Prom, we have done a little towards the success of the Ninth Annual High Jinks. We have won the one hundred percent Banking Pennant nine times, and we feel mighty proud of it!

Our officers for this year are as follows:

Iola Dainty--------------President
Robert Kelso-------------Vice-President
Henry Martin----------Secretary-Treasurer
Harry Cordua----------Student Affairs
Theo Ella Thompson-----Student Affairs

Lucille Trembley

THE SENIOR CLASS NOTES

All senior business and social affairs come in the latter part of the school year, and, of course, the biggest, grandest, and most thrilling affair of all comes on the last day, graduation! The best is always left for the last.

Our officers for this year are

Golda Frey-------------President
Edgar Armstrong-------Vice-President
Ramona Arata--------Secretary-Treasurer
Zelma Hudson--------Student Affairs
James Hannum--------Student Affairs

We have selected our Senior Play, which will be "The Lion and the Mouse." We plan to stage it about the first of March. Try-outs are to be held before Christmas vacation.

We won the one hundred percent Banking Pennant eight times and this shows that the Seniors can save.
